

Russian Academy 2005

Daily folkdance classes give students an opportunity to learn traditional dances from Russia, Ukraine, Romania, and other Eastern European countries.

Students spend an average of 3 hours per day in language class, where they learn the fundamentals of Russian vocabulary and grammar.

Hands-on activities include a cooking night, during which students sample authentic Russian cuisine.

Students visit a Russian Orthodox cathedral during a field trip to Washington, DC.

The Russian Academy's mascots generate team spirit during the annual Olympic games.

The Russian Academy processes to the Olympic games, where they will compete against other language academies in events that require strategy and skill.

Students have several opportunities to try their hands at traditional Russian arts and crafts, such as matrioshki (nesting dolls) and pysanki (Easter eggs).

In addition to language, students study the history and culture of Russia and the former Soviet Union. Here, students in the drama club apply their knowledge of Russian history in a skit they produced and performed for their parents.
